

IC SPICY

IC SPICY Marketing Strategy

Professional enough for buyers. Casual enough for X.

For solo-founder execution across social, DTC, retail, and community channels.

Farm-grown heat. Chef-built flavor. Blockchain-backed provenance.

Prepared May 2026 - Draft marketing material; legal review required before public token claims.

Positioning

IC SPICY should be marketed as a premium food brand with a Web3 trust layer. The mainstream headline is not NFTs. The mainstream headline is rare Florida peppers turned into chef-built seasonings with traceable origin.

Primary phrase: farm-grown heat, chef-built flavor. Secondary phrase: blockchain-backed provenance. Use the second phrase only after the audience understands the physical product.

Audience Segments

Pepper heads: care about rare cultivars, heat levels, grow methods, and authenticity.

Home cooks and grillers: want easy flavor upgrades that beat boring grocery blends.

Foodies and chefs: want origin, ingredient quality, balance, and culinary storytelling.

ICP/Web3 users: want a real RWA case study with NFTs, provenance, and token utility.

Retail buyers: want clean unit economics, tight SKU count, velocity proof, and margin.

Core Channels

X: build-in-public, ICP threads, market takes, founder story, launch updates.

Instagram: product photography, grow shots, recipe reels, chef plating, farm visuals.

TikTok: short grow updates, pepper reactions, seasoning demos, behind-the-scenes blending.

Facebook: local Florida buyers, pepper groups, farmers-market updates, community trust.

Email: drop calendar, limited batches, recipes, PepperHead updates, retail milestones.

In-person: farmers markets, chef pop-ups, tastings, grocery demos, local press.

Content Pillars

From tray to token: lifecycle and provenance storytelling.

Chef-built blends: tasting notes, pairings, technique, plating, and recipe applications.

Florida terroir: Zone 10a heat, sun, rain, humidity, and rare pepper adaptation.

Founder journey: solo developer, grower, chef network, and real build progress.

Retail conquest: transparent journey from DTC to specialty shelves to grocery chains.

Weekly Solo-Founder Cadence

Three short videos per week: grow update, cooking demo, packaging/product update.

Two X threads per week: one ICP/build thread, one food/market/brand thread.

One email per week: drop, story, recipe, or behind-the-scenes note.

One live touchpoint per month: X Space, tasting, farmers market, or AMA.

One retail progress update per month: new account, sell-through, demo, or buyer conversation.

Retail Strategy

Do not approach national grocery first. Build DTC demand, local proof, specialty retail sell-through, and reorder data.

Launch with three to four hero SKUs. Buyers dislike unfocused founders with twelve unproven blends.

Track units per store per week, repeat purchase, demo conversion, customer reviews, gross margin, case pack economics, and production capacity.

Use a premium sell sheet that explains the founder, the chef angle, the farm source, and the reason the product deserves shelf space.
